SUMMER SESSION ENROLMENT DECLINES

By S. C. T. CLARKE,
Director of Summer Session

The 1973 student enrolment in Summer Session is 3,715, down approximately 900 from the peak in 1970. This decline is part of a continent-wide trend. At The University of Alberta, the peak enrolment was 4,612, followed by 4,420 in 1971, and 3,946 in 1972.

Since the inauguration of Spring Session in 1972, the combined enrolment has sharply reversed this downward trend with 5,180 students in 1972 and 5,800 in 1973.

A survey completed by 2,631 (about 71 percent) of the Summer Session students revealed that 601 (23 percent) attended both Spring and Summer Sessions. Of the 2,631 respondents, 494 (19 percent) were taking two full courses in Summer Session; 308 (12 percent) were taking one and one-half; 1,557 (59 percent) were taking one; and 272 (10 percent) were taking a half course. The normal load is, in practice, one full course, with a few students who have superior records taking more than one. Some concern had been expressed about the acceleration possible if students enrolled in both Spring and Summer Sessions with a maximum course load. Of the 601 respondents who attended both sessions, only 50 (8 percent) were registered in four full courses. The survey results were analyzed by the Office of Institutional Research and Planning.

Summer Session, 1973 offered 183 full courses through seven different faculties and schools; Education (46 percent of the courses offered); Arts (32 percent); Science (12 percent); Physical Education (5 percent); Business Administration and Commerce (3 percent); Household Economics (1½ percent); Library Science (½ percent). There were 230 instructors and a total of 252 different courses.

The 3,715 students were working towards degrees in Education (2,453 students); Arts (373); Graduate Studies and Research (285); Science (224); Business Administration and Commerce (122); Household Economics (68); Physical Education (55); Nursing (51); Agriculture (27); Library Science (17); Others (13).

The downward trend in Summer Session enrolment may continue as the qualifications of Alberta teachers improve (about 70 percent now have degrees), as teaching positions continue to be hard to find, and as a belief persists that it is more difficult for the highly qualified to get positions. These factors may be partly offset by the opposite trend towards an increase in part-time students. In this case, the present proportion of Summer Session students other than teachers (about 30 percent) may well increase.
